TRIBUTE EDITION · UNOFFICIAL

WRITING WORKFLOW

The Two-Session Writing System

Test ideas in short form, build pillars in long form, and let AI only redistribute your own words.

Based on a post on X by

Dickie Bush · @dickiebush

https://x.com/dickiebush/status/2112693852607799545

2 session types | Weekly rhythm | Session cards | “My words only” AI prompt

Free kit · A gift · Not for sale · Original synthesis prepared by Gilbert Cruz · October 2026

THE METHOD

Two sessions, one rule

Dickie Bush described splitting his writing into two kinds of sessions: short-form to test ideas and distill them, and long-form to move a “pillar piece” forward. He writes all of it himself and uses AI only to redistribute his exact words into other formats. Here is that idea as a routine you can follow.

Step 1 — Keep one idea inbox

Every idea goes into a single list: one line, not a draft. Short sessions pull from here.

Step 2 — Short-form session: test

Write several short posts from the inbox. Try to say each idea in as few words as possible. Cutting is the exercise.

Step 3 — Read the signal

After a few days, see which short posts were saved, replied to or asked about. Those are pillar candidates. Use your own judgment too, not only numbers.

Step 4 — Long-form session: build a pillar

Pick one tested idea and move a long piece forward: newsletter, essay or guide. A pillar can take several sessions.

Step 5 — Redistribute with AI, your words only

Give the AI your finished pillar and ask it to cut, reorder and reformat it into short posts or a video script using only your sentences. Review every output.

The line that makes this work: you do the thinking and the writing; AI does the reshaping. If an output contains a sentence you did not write, delete it.

CHECKLIST & TEMPLATE

Session cards & weekly rhythm

Short-form session card

- [ ] Timer set (for example 30–45 minutes).
- [ ] Pulled 3–5 ideas from the inbox.
- [ ] Cut every draft at least once for length.
- [ ] Posted or scheduled, and logged in the signal table.

Long-form session card

- [ ] One pillar, one goal for this session (outline, draft or edit).
- [ ] The pillar idea was already tested in short form.
- [ ] Wrote everything myself before opening any AI tool.
- [ ] Ran the “my words only” prompt and reviewed every output.

Signal table

Short post (first line)	Date	Saves / replies / questions	Pillar candidate?

Suggested weekly rhythm

Day	Session
Mon	Short-form
Tue	Short-form
Wed	Long-form (pillar)
Thu	Short-form
Fri	Long-form + AI redistribution

Adapt the days to your week. The point is the alternation, not the calendar.

WORKED EXAMPLE

A designer tests, picks and redistributes

FICTIONAL EXAMPLE · MADE-UP DATA

Sam is a fictional UX designer who writes about portfolios. One two-week cycle:

Session	What Sam writes	What happens
Short #1	Five short posts on common portfolio mistakes.	The one about case studies that never show an outcome gets the most replies.
Short #2	Four new angles on that same idea.	Two of them get saved repeatedly. It becomes the pillar.
Long #1	Outline and first draft of a newsletter: “How to write a case study that shows outcomes”.	Pillar draft ready.
Long #2	Final edit, then the “my words only” prompt splits it into six short posts and a 60-second script.	Sam deletes one output because it added a claim he never wrote.

Why it works

- Short form does the market research for free.
- The pillar is built on an idea people already reacted to.
- Redistribution saves time without diluting the voice.

Fictional example to show the workflow. No numbers or results are implied.

CREDIT & DISCLAIMER

Credit & disclaimer

Dickie Bush · @dickiebush

https://x.com/dickiebush/status/2112693852607799545

Post published on X on 20 October 2026 (UTC). The two-session split and the “I write 100%, AI redistributes my exact words” principle are his.

This kit is an unofficial tribute. It turns a public post into an original routine, session cards, a signal table, a fictional example and an AI prompt written by Gilbert Cruz. No text, images or branding from the creator were copied, and the creator has not reviewed or endorsed it.

- Free: given away, not sold.
- Not affiliated with Dickie Bush or his companies.
- Examples are fictional; no outcome is promised.
- If the creator wants changes, or prefers this kit not to exist, it will be edited or removed.